LAST month marked the fifth anniversary of Graystar Trailers in the refrigerated transport manufacturing industry.

Starting a new manufacturing business in 2009 was probably not an ideal time.

But David Gray was very lucky to have some extremely good clients, and suppliers, who helped him to establish the business.

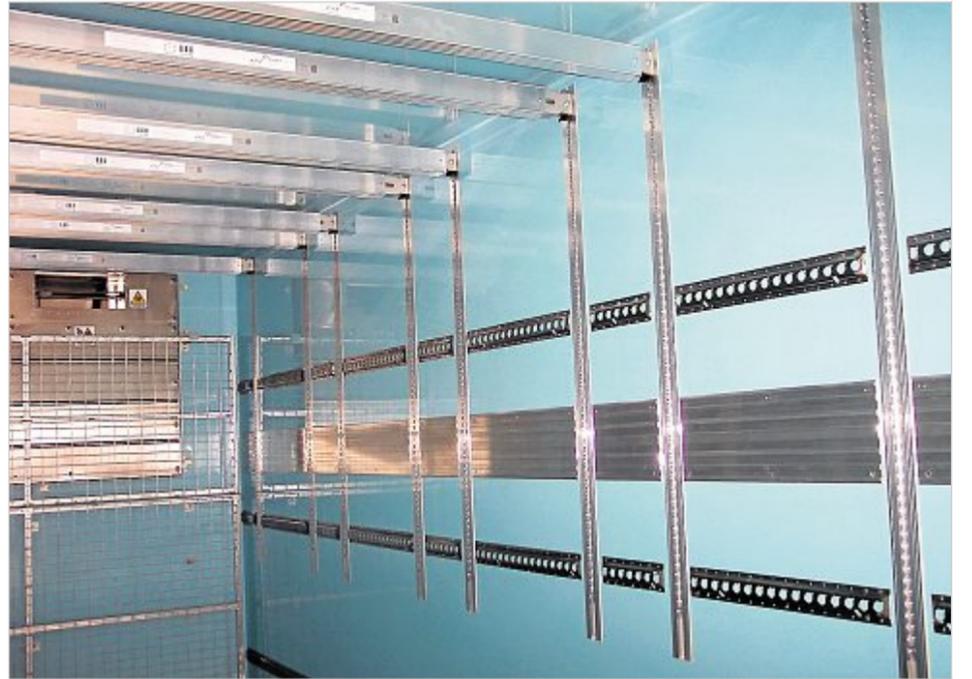

This year to date has been relatively quiet, but between new equipment, repairs and refurbishments the team has kept busy.

Graystar Trailers specialises in vertical double loader systems. They have now built numerous B-doubles with this system for various clients. They have proven to be very successful.

Obviously with the OHS benefits of this system and the quality of our construction, there has been a lot of interest.

Another great benefit to this system is the fact that the bars are contained in the trailers and cannot be lost or stolen.

The other main thing Graystar Trailers have been concentrating on over the last couple of years is weight reduction.

They have been doing a lot of research and development in to both chassis design and laminated panel construction.

The latest trailers are about 300-400kg lighter than what has previously been built by the company as a standard.

To keep up with the quality levels, all Graystar Trailers are built on a full chassis for maximum strength.

In fact, Graystar Trailers believe the latest construction designs have allowed them to build stronger trailers, which are also better thermally.

The size of the business means they can work with clients to provide what they require, and it is something they do very well.

The company is interested in listening to clients and providing a top-quality product, not just selling mass-produced equipment.

This, and the fact they bend over backwards to help, are probably why they are finding the product basically sells itself.
